he holds the strip of solder in the other, A stream of gas made from nupths is thrown from the burner upon the soldering-iron, which melts the solder and seals the can as fast as it can be turned upon the platform. Two cans are sealed every minute, when everything is ready, boy will seal from 700 to 1,000 cans a day, and the pay is 7c. per 100. This work was formerly done by men at a cost of $7 or $8 a day, consuming twice as much solder, and this is a very good illustration of the value of labor-saving machinery.

The cans pass immediately from the solder to the cooking apparatus. The cooking tank is six feet long three feet wide, and four feet deep, furnished with an elevator having a capacity of 112 gal lon cans. The sealed cans are lowered into the tank, and cooked by steam for two hours. There are four of these cooking tanks. The cans are partially couled after cooking, and vented by making a pin hole to let out any air within and are immediately scaled again They are then removed to the platform outside of the building to complete the cooling. After this comes a thorough examination of every can, for any defect in the soldering which admits air. The smallest hole would spoil the contents of the can in a few days. Any leakage of air is indicated by the bulging of the head of the can. If it is perfectly tight, there is a slight depression of the head. . The cleaning of the outside of the cans, and labeling, completes the work. The goods are then boxed and sent to Acker, Merrall & Condit, and to Park & Tilford wholesale grocers of New York, who take all the tomatoes manufactured by this company. They are mostly consumed in the city and its vicinity.

The cases are made of half-inch pine, with inch heads, and come in shooks from Michigan, and are put together here. The cost of labor and material is about fifteen cents a case.

Besides the eanned goods, catsup is manufactured from the skins, and the refuse that is rejected at the hopper. The whole mass fitst passes through a mill, which sperates the pulp from the skins. From the vat of the mills, the pulp, is pumped up stairs into a reservoir. When a sufficient quantity has accamulated, it is drawn from the reservoir into the cooking tank, and cooked three hours. It is then drawn off into barrels and allowed to ferment one week. The pulp settles at the bottom free from impurities, and the water at the top is pored off, and the barrel filled again with tomato pulp. It is then returned to the cooking-tank and heated; the spices are added, and the catsup is barreled and sent to market, where it is bottled, labeled and sent to the retailer's. Charles Gulden of New York takes all the catsup made by this company, at fifteen cents a gallon. Apples will tollow tomatoes in due order, and have already begun to come in from the neighboring farms in limited cans, and are designed for pies and sauca In family use. There is a large demand for canned apples in the European maikets, and it is not improbable that they will supersede the shipment of apples in barrels, which are greatly exposed to desay and loss, both on the voyage and af ler arrival. The canned goods are a pafe article for shipment, and if necessa ry, can wait for a long time for market and comsumption, without damage.

The large piles of apples in the storeout the factorycrow ed with teams waiting to unload, the platforms filled with tomato crates, the busy crowd inside the factory, and the daily shipment of canned goods look Jike the revival of business in this community.- for Co. Gent.
